For more than 50 years, InterHab has been a leading advocate for the critical role service providers play in enriching the lives of people with intellectual and developmental disabilities.

WE BELIEVE:

- In the inherent dignity of all individuals.

- Community services, employment, and housing should be available to Kansans, regardless of race, national origin, religion, gender, age, or disability.

- Community services should reflect the needs of the individual, and that they should reflect a reasonable response to the whole community's needs.

- Supports and services for Kansans with IDD should be available in their respective communities or geographic regions of choice.

- Government, businesses and IDD service providers should form partnerships to create and promote employment opportunities for Kansans with IDD.

- We are all responsible for advocating against discrimination through education and training, promoting needed supports and services, and providing resources to assist individuals to live as independently as possible.
